Interview

Q: Have you been painting long?

A: Since I was a child...

Q: Is painting a hobby or a profession?

A: I consider myself an amateur really.

Q: What did you think of the Al Rajhi Bank Ladies Painting Competition as an idea?

A: It's amazing. It's a real honor for us to know that a bank is giving attention and supporting the arts and artists; especially since this field is very removed from the banking industry.

Q: How did you learn about the Competition?

A: I found out about it quite by accident on a random forum.

Q: How did you find this experience, what was your impression?

A: During this experience I discovered exactly who my supporters were and who really had my back.. The experience itself I found to be fantastic; it was so full of excitement with a little fear thrown in... It was like being in this very interesting game, one that I really enjoyed to the very end. I admit, some of the submitted paintings were better than mine, but I worked so hard to collect votes, and that's why I won. I think I deserved it.

Q: How were you able to collect all the votes you did?

A: At first, I wasn't all that excited because I doubted I really had the chance to win. But later on, I told my family and friends, e-mailed my painting to all my contacts and broadcasted it on my mobile and Facebook. In spite of this, I regret that I didn't think to spread the news through forums too.

Q: How did you get the good news and how did you react?

A: Throughout the Competition, I was monitoring the website 24/7. When the voting stopped, I knew where I stood. I was in second place. So on Wednesday and Thursday my joy was beyond words. Then the official results came out, and my brother called to tell me I was in first place! I couldn't believe it... The lady who originally had more votes than I did, had somehow collected fake ones. ...I ended up with the grand prize, thanks to God.

Q: If a third Competition took place, would you participate again?

A: God willing it will and I would love to participate again. This time, I would definitely invite everyone I know to send in their paintings too since most of them paint.

Q: In your opinion, how can we improve the Competition?

A: I think the voting could be better. As for the paintings, I prefer that the jury classify them before displaying them to voters. In my opinion, it's much more fair... I also suggest that the Bank organize an exhibition for the paintings, which would increase its support. Another point I would appreciate is if the Competition was sorted according to age categories.

Q: What are your future plans now that you've won the grand prize?

A: Honestly, I used it to help my family and gave part of the prize to the voters who backed me up. I was also able to pay the tuition fees of the Institute for Learning the English Language.

Q: What do you think of Al Rajhi Bank?

A: I've been a loyal customer for a very long time. I really appreciate this Islamic Bank, the decency of all its dealings with us and its overall excellence. To me, these are facts, not compliments.

Q: Which of Al Rajhi Bank's offered products or services do you want the most?

A: I know the Bank offers a lot of superb products, but so far, I've only opened an account with them. God willing, I intend to get a VISA card soon.

Q: Would you like to add anything further?

A: I thank God for this success. I also want to thank everyone who voted for me, especially my 2 brothers, Faisal and Abdullah. I would like to use this occasion to congratulate all the other winners and wish them the best... And of course, great appreciation goes to Al Rajhi Bank for everything. As for future contestants, I say participate for your own sake and you can only win the prize by doing so; if you don't win, there is nothing to lose... The experience itself will have been rich and that's its own reward. Thank you.

Title: Social media... an obsession?

Body:

- Are you always on your phone at the office instead of on your work computer, which is facebook and twitter restricted?
- Do you refresh your facebook or twitter page over 15 times in one hour?
- Do you refuse to spend time in places that have no internet connection?
- Is your laptop or phone the first thing you check in the morning and the last thing you see before closing your eyes to sleep?
- Do you update your status every hour on the hour?
- Do you spend time planning and thinking about what you will upload, share or tweet next?
- Is your mood dependent on what you find on facebook or twitter?
- Can you go a full day without thinking about your various social media accounts?
- What do you use your smart phone for more than anything else?
- Do your answers shock you?

Well, you're not alone.

The online world opened up a Pandora's box of connections and sharing that enrich our lives and our minds. When used beneficially, social media and the Internet can save time and money, and can make the reaches of the earth as small as your computer, phone or tablet screen. On the other hand, the saying "too much of a good thing" definitely applies as well. For many young men and women, social media has become a bit of an addiction, one that has narrowed their life to its parameters. Their self-esteem, confidence, friends and social life are purely dependent on social networking. When taken to such extremes, it gets in the way of studying, working, responsibilities, relationships and even in the way of experiencing life. Before, when we had to be at a computer to access social media, we were able to leave it behind for most of the day. But now, we can take social media with us everywhere we go thanks to smart phones and tablets with constant 3G connections. We are never without it, and it's never without us.

So ask yourself one last question, can you be "you" without it?
